The decision of the Supreme Court of Indiana is a fair illustration of the cruel instincts that have always characterized both the legislation and the judicial decisions of the Democratic party towards the negro race in this country. They have always done their best to keep the negroes a despised and degraded race, and yet at the same time have pointed the tinger of scorn at them because of their in-teriority to the white race. Their record in this respect reminds one of the proscriptive spirit in which the women of the Shunar caste are dealt with in Hindostan. The females of this despised caste are compelled by the usages of the country to dress in a style that subjects them to constant obloquy, and when a few years ago a revolutionary Rsjah succeeded to power and was disposed to allow them to dress as other persons, and thus become decent and respectable members of society, a ve bement protest went up from the Hindoo aristocracy against it. It was said, in sub stance, in that protest, that the religion the laws, the public order, and the private morality of the respectable classes of Hindoo society rested on the fundamental principle that no Shunar woman should be allowed to dress herself decently.

So with the Democracy in their treatment of the negro. The policy of the party has steadfastly been to imbrute the race as far as possible; to load it down in other words, with all sorts of proscriptions, discriminations and inequali ties, and then allege that the safety and well being of white society required the race to be thus kept down. It has seemed as if the party was utterly in-capable of dealing in the least degree sympathetically with the Negro. Chief Justice Taney embodied the Paganism of their policy as a party in one single re mark when he said on the bench that the Negro had no rights that white men were bound to respect, a remark that the late THADDEUS STEVENS once said had consigned its author to "everlasting fame

But dismissing the sentimental view of the case before us, how can the Democratic party, or any other party in this country, legally levy school taxes upon a Negro and at the same time deny him the privileges of education? It seems in the Indiana case that taxes had been ac tually levied upon the colored man and that there was no school near by save the white school for him to send his children to. And from that school his children were ejected because of their color, and trine called the "doctrine of develwere ejected because of their color, and he had therefore either to let them grow up in ignorance or else procure an education for them outside the public school at an additional expense. In other words, he had not only to pay for educating the had not only to haps we shall not have a satisfactory angent, and thus become better citizens. Under the Constitution of the United States can any citizen's children be deprived of the benefits of the public schools simply because of their color? This is an important question that ought to be definitely and promptly settled.

THE warfare between religion and its opponents in England grows very lively. The Pope, in spite of the blow dealt him and hurled at Tyndall and Huxley the mes "if they believe in animism or automatism." The religious question is really the question of the day in England, and Disraell's predicted religious war may not be so far off as we generally imagine it to be.—Rechange.

Pipe Line and Railroad Company. PITT:BURGH, November 30.—The argument on the injunction to restrain the gument on the injunction to restrain the Conduit Pipe Line Company from runn-ing their pipes under the West Pennsyl-vania Railroad track, at Palmer's Run, comes up to morrow. It is believed that if the injunction is refused the Railroad Company will take it upon themselves to remove the pipes, in which case a col-lision is likely to occur between the forces of the Railroad and Pipe Line companies. The Railroad Company for some time back has been trying to prevent the pipes from being laid under or near their tracks, but early Saturday morning a large force of men were gathered and the pipes laid in the bed of Palmer's Run, under the tracks. The Conduit Company are enlisting men to night ages that have a large from the pipes laid.
